

What Happened to B151? The AIA Reorganizes Document Numbering

Many forms have been renumbered, including the most popular AIA owner-architect agreement, the B151-1997. The changes reflect refinement in their use and place within the family of documents. So there will be no more B151 or B141, but instead a greater variety of agreements and scope documents, allowing greater flexibility in contractual relationships. There are other numbering changes as well. Many of the owner-contractor agreements have new numbers to better fit them into the logical renumbering system introduced this year. And some AIA documents are being discontinued. More information is available through the contract documents part of the AIA website, www.aia.org/docs_organization.

The AIA B141, B151, and many other modified or discontinued agreements and forms will not disappear immediately. They will be available for use in the electronic AIA contract documents system until May 31, 2009. Existing paper editions will be distributed and can be used in their original form (not photocopied) until the existing stock is depleted. ♦
